

BAR TUBERCULOUS FROM THE SCHOOLS

Sixty Children of School Age Are Excluded From Public Institutions.

TO OPEN SPECIAL BUILDING

Plans Are Being Formulated by Superintendent Thurston for Presentation to Board.

More than sixty children of school age in Washington are excluded from attendance at public schools because they have tuberculosis.

Following a conference with Dr. W. C. Woodward, health officer of the District, E. L. Thurston, superintendent of schools, has begun formulation of plans for the care of these pupils, which are to be presented to the Board of Education in a short time.

These children are to be cared for in a special school, either in an open air room, or an open window room, in a building where no other pupils attend. School officials will be able to provide such housing in a building now available.

Other Necessities Lacking.

But there now are no funds available for three other features of a segregated school of this kind. These features are:

Transportation of the children to and from school in vehicles other than street cars.

Frequent feeding of children while in the classroom, as is required by the nature of their ailment.

Warm clothing specially adapted to protect them from cold and not interfere with school work.

"My personal opinion is that the public will have to provide funds for these purposes," said Mr. Thurston. "Without private aid, the school does not know how these children can be adequately provided for. Of course, I should make no appeal for funds until such action was approved by the Board of Education."

The question of transportation is an important one for two reasons, Mr. Thurston explained.

Many of the children are of poor parents and to compel them to pay car fare daily to some central school would be a heavy drain on the family budget. In the two open-window schools now conducted under the auspices of pupils are paid out of private contributions.

Should Not Use Street Cars.

More important still, in the case of a school for tubercular children is the fact that these children should not be allowed to use the street cars in large groups. If, upon dismissal of the school, these children all board street cars in groups, the result will be a menace to health of other street car passengers, and is likely to bring prompt complaints from whatever section is chosen for the open air school experiment.

The question of food is equally important. It was stated that it might do more harm than good to have the children taken from their homes to go to school, and then not being fed regularly according to the diet prescribed by physicians for the tuberculosis.

They have uniform special clothing to protect them against the cold is equally important, and in many cases parents probably would be unable to provide such clothing, Mr. Thurston said.

Already one organization, the Monday Evening Club, has begun consideration of the question of caring for these children.

Dr. E. L. Thurston, supervising principal of the district, one of the pioneer advocates here of open-air schools, has been placed in charge of a meeting to discuss the problem on December 18, when the topic will be "Proper School Care of Tubercular and Tuberculous Children."

Dr. V. Schick to Speak.

On the program will be the Rev. Dr. John Van Schaick, Jr., president of the Board of Education, who will outline what the schools would like to do for the tubercular children.

Miss Sue H. Gardner, teacher of the class in Washington's open-window school, founded under Dr. E. L. Thurston, will explain the work being done in her school.

Miss Gardner's class is the fifth grade of the school, where the experiment was started several years ago of having an open-air class for all pupils of the school who reached that grade. This school has no tubercular children.

In this school one luncheon is served, after the morning recess, and this is provided for by private contributions.

Dr. E. L. Thurston has advocated an open air school for tubercular children. He has made visits of inspection to other cities. In Detroit, for example, he found that this city provided not only luncheons, but a cook and an assistant to prepare meals, and special teachers.

Dr. W. C. Woodward, health officer, is to be asked to speak at the meeting on what the health officer would like to be done if an open air school is opened.

Must Teach Hygiene.

"To be successful I feel that this experiment must not only be a place where tubercular children can continue regular school courses," said Superintendent Thurston. "It also must be a place where rules of hygiene are taught, and where every effort is made to surround the pupils with conditions most favorable to recovery from the disease."

Dr. E. L. Thurston, who has been in the school for several years, said that he believed that by starting with the help of private contributions, they can demonstrate to Congress the wise service such a school would perform and later get an appropriation.

KNOWS ALL THE RULERS

Man Who Called to See President Taken to Asylum.

A man who said he was personally acquainted with Kaiser Wilhelm and all the other rulers of Europe, called at the Capitol yesterday to see the president of the American Bankers' Association. He told a Capitol policeman that he loaned the bankers $10,000, and that if he didn't get it he would take the matter to President Wilson.

Policeman Kish, of the Capitol force, escorted the man to the Sixth precinct station house, where he said he was Titus J. Pitt, forty-three years old, of Mechanicsville, Mo. He was sent to Washington Hospital for mental observation.

NORFOLK AWAITS ATLANTIC FLEET

Warships and Vessels of Departments Attraction of Commercial Congress.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 26.—With the assembling at this port December 11 of the Atlantic fleet under Admiral Mayo, together with the vessels of the Department of Commerce, the Light House Service, the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Fisheries Commission, the greatest marine review in the history of the United States will take place.

The occasion will mark the opening of the eighth annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, which will last four days.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, in the dispatch boat Dolphin, will officially review the combined war and peace fleet on December 13. On that date there will be a marine parade and pageant which for the number of vessels engaged and magnitude of details, is expected to surpass any similar undertaking ever seen on this continent.

Aeroplanes to Take Part.

In addition to the long lines of battleships, armored cruisers, scout cruisers, torpedo-boats, destroyers and submarines there will be seen for the first time on public exhibition, the gigantic air and sea planes recently completed from standardized plans of the Government.

Following the review of the fleet by Secretary Daniels there will be a reception aboard the flagship when the Secretary will meet the visiting delegates and other guests.

Department Fleets.

Although it is not generally known, the Department of Commerce, the Light House Service, Immigration Department, Bureau of Fisheries and the Coast and Geodetic Survey have a combined fleet of 150 vessels. As many of these as can be spared from their active duties have been ordered to rendezvous here early next month.

WILL TALK ON WAR

Wounded Russian Officer to Relate Experiences at Press Club.

Lieut. Zinov Pechkoff, of the French foreign legion, who lost an arm fighting for the allies with the Russian army, will give a recital of his experiences at the National Press Club at 4:30 this afternoon.

The Russian officer is in this country on a lecture tour, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the work of the American ambulance and hospital service in France. Lieutenant Pechkoff was in the American hospital in Paris for six months after he was wounded in the last of four thrilling bayonet charges against fortified German positions. His recital of these charges is a feature of his lectures.

Lieutenant Pechkoff will give not only a first hand description of present trench fighting, but he will give his estimate of the psychological effect the war will have upon the soldier's moral nature; whether he will tend to brutalize or humanize mankind. After his lecture the speaker will answer questions of Press Club members.

WANT BLEAKLEY TO KEEP ON EARTH

Republican Brethren Don't Want Him to Go Flying and Endanger Control.

O. D. Bleakley, of Pennsylvania, Congressman-elect, who flew down to Washington the other day in an aeroplane, will not do it again if he follows the wishes of his Republican brethren in the House.

No formal warning has been issued Bleakley, but all the same the leaders hope he'll travel in some safer fashion after this.

The reason is that if Bleakley should drop out of that aeroplane and get killed it might turn control of the House over to the Democrats.

In these perilous days the life of a member-elect of the House is a precious thing. Ordinarily, one member-elect doesn't count for much.

The only way Bleakley should aeroplane, say House Republican leaders, is to take one or two Democratic members-elect with him. Then, if there is a fall, it won't affect the legislative future of a great nation.

Just what party will control the House is still disputed. Chairman Woods of the Republican Congressional committee checked up the districts today and said the Republicans would control by at least five. He said the Democrats could take one or two disputed districts and still fall to control.

Chairman Doremus of the Democratic control. Meantime, the Democrats of the House office forces are in a state of great tribulation.
